Illustrative Examples

India - We received a request from an Indian law enforcement agency to remove allegedly defamatory comments posted to a Yahoo Group. We rejected the request because it was not properly served and provided the Indian law enforcement agency with instructions for how to properly serve its request. We did not receive a properly addressed request as of the close of this reporting period.

Malaysia - We received a request from a Malaysian government agency to remove a user comment to a Yahoo News article because it allegedly contained religiously offensive statements. We rejected the request because it was not served properly and we provided the Malaysian government agency with instructions for how to submit a properly addressed request. By the time the Malaysian government agency provided proper service, the news article and all associated user comments had been removed for unrelated reasons.

United States - We received a court order from a U.S. government agency to remove content from specified domains. Yahoo did not host any of the domains or content so we did not comply with the order.
